SUBJECT CIA Report on South Africa and Namibia

JACK ANDERSON: Fifteen years ago the United Nations ordered South Africa out of Namibia but the occupation still continues.

Here is the Inside Story. The headlines are dominated by developments in Latin America but here is an important story you haven't read.

South Africa continues to occupy Namibia forcibly despite a 15-year-old United Nations resolution ordered South Africa to pull out.

Now Namibia is a vast wasteland, mostly barren desert about the size of Texas but is fantastically endowed with valuable minerals, mostly diamonds and uranium.

I have seen a top secret CIA report on South Africa's involvement there. They have a 20,000 man police force stationed in Namibia with millions of dollars worth of private investments to protect.

As early as 1966 South Africa was skimming $256 million a year off of Namibia's economy.

Let me quote from this secret report: the South Africans have administered the territory virtually as a province. They have regarded Namibia as a substantially economic asset.
